PREFACE

In the early 19th century, military actions in the Persian khanates and Turkish pashaliks bordering Georgia led the chief administrators in Georgia, such as Paskevich, Rosen, Grgolovin, and others, to engage in constant written correspondence with the governments of Persia and Turkey. The Foreign Representative in Tiflis played a key role in these communications.

In 1829, due to increased efforts in border affairs, at the request of the chief administrator in Georgia, Paskevich, and through the vice-chancellor Count Nesselrode, there was a request to strengthen the staff of the Chancellery of the Chief Administrator to handle direct correspondence with the states bordering Georgia. In response, officials were dispatched from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs in Tiflis to St. Petersburg. Paskevich added another official from his civil chancellery to assist them. Thus, a special Diplomatic Chancellery was established under the chief administrator in Georgia from April 25, 1829, to carry out the imperial policy in the Middle East.

Basis: f.11, d.24, p.1; f.1488, Historical Administration of the Caucasus, appendix, pp.137-138.

In the month of April 1840, the chief administrator of Georgia was renamed as the chief administrator of the Transcaucasian Krai. New staff and regulations were approved, and the diplomatic chancellery adopted the name "Diplomatic Chancellery of the Chief Administrator of the Transcaucasian Krai."

Basis: 1840, p.13368.

From March 26, 1845, the Caucasus was placed under viceregency, and the Chancellery of the Viceroy of the Caucasus was established. The diplomatic chancellery was renamed "Diplomatic Chancellery of the Viceroy of the Caucasus."

Basis: 1845, p.18706.

In 1859, the staff of the Diplomatic Chancellery was modified and strengthened. Regulations for the Diplomatic Chancellery of the Viceroy of the Caucasus were issued.

Basis: f.11, d.3282.

Under this name, the diplomatic chancellery existed until March 1, 1868, when, due to the reorganization of central institutions in the Caucasus region and the abolition of the Chancellery of the Viceroy of the Caucasus, the Diplomatic Chancellery was abolished. Its functions were transferred to the newly established Chancellery of the Chief Administration of the Viceroy of the Caucasus, specifically for foreign correspondence, and the position of an official from the Ministry of Foreign Affairs was established under the Viceroy of the Caucasus for border relations.

Basis: 1887, p.45269, para. P; p.45786; f.11, d.3282.

The diplomatic chancellery was abolished on March 1, 1868.

Basis: 1868, p.45785.

Materials from the fund were transferred to the Central State Historical Archive of the Georgian SSR in 1923 after evacuation from the North Caucasus, where they were relocated during the First Imperialist War due to the opening of the Caucasus Front in 1914.

The fund contains documentary materials on military actions involving Russia and Persia (1827), Russia and Turkey (1826), correspondence regarding the conclusion of trade treaties with Turkey - the Adrianople Treaty in 1829 and the Turkmenchay Treaty in 1828, instructions to A.S. Griboedov regarding border relations with Turkey and Persia and his mission to negotiate with Abbas-Mirza. It also includes information about the assassination of the Russian envoy to Persia, A.S. Griboedov, the appointment of pensions and one-time allowances for Griboedov's mother, wife N.A. Chavchavadze, and the families of those who perished with him, military actions between Persia and Khiva, information about Egyptian troops operating in Asia Minor, resettlement to the Caucasus from Persia and Turkey, violations of borders, issuance of permits to travel to the Transcaucasian region for foreign travelers, scholars, and officers of foreign armies, the prohibition of entry into the Caucasus for academician Brosse, Professor of Armenian language Lenanyan, and others, the passage through the Caucasus by diplomatic representatives of Persia, Turkey, and European states, the appointment of Russian consuls in Tehran, Trabzon, and other locations, acceptance into Russian citizenship, issuance of foreign passports, and other materials.

The fund was sorted and described in 1925-1926. The materials in the fund were chronologically arranged, and there was no structural division of the fund.

In 1949, 37 storage units were received from the Archives of the Krasnodar Krai and annexed to the fund.

During the editing of this inventory, storage units not related to the profile of the fund were identified and attached to the respective funds. Refer to the marks on the old inventory and the transfer table.

Storage units from No. 1 to No. 25, initiated in F.2 "Chancellery of the Chief Administrator in Georgia in 1824, 1827, and 1828," were transferred in 1829 to the newly established Diplomatic Chancellery, where they were completed in 1930, 1833, 1836, 1840, and other years.

Materials not eligible for storage were separated in 1948, totaling 9 units. During the current inventory editing, 11 units were separated.

The inventory of the fund was edited to improve and reveal the titles that did not disclose the content of the storage units, eliminate grammatical and stylistic errors, and remove elements of political bias in the titles.

Documentary materials from the fund, judging by the production numbers, have been preserved at a rate of 30-40%.

Correspondence contained in files of Fund No. 11, "Diplomatic Chancellery of the Viceroy of the Caucasus," is mostly presented in Russian, partially in Eastern and European languages.

Special attention is given to the files:

No. 11 - concerning the conclusion of the Turkmenchay Treaty with Persia with the participation of A.S. Griboedov.

No. 3300 - about assisting Academician Abikh in his research on earthquakes in the city of Shamakhi and other cities in the Transcaucasian region. The fund contains autographs of Count Orbeliani, Ahundov M., and others.

Documentary materials from the fund (according to the old numbering I 29) were used in the Acts of the Caucasian Archeographic Commission, materials about A.S. Griboedov - in corresponding publications.

The inventory includes personal and geographical indices, a list of abbreviations used in the descriptive articles of the inventory, and a transfer table of old numbers to the new inventory.
